

Kelley Ready

Kelley Ready's involvement with women's issues and trade unions began over twenty-five years ago in Ithaca as an activist and an organizer. Subsequently she moved to Boston where she represented the collective print shop where she worked, Red Sun Press, as a union steward the UAW. She was also active in the Solidarity Movement working with Human Rights and feminism in Central America. As an anthropologist, she has taught in several of the CUNY colleges, Northeastern University, and Holy Cross College. Currently she is an Assistant Director in the Sustainable International Development Program at Brandeis University. The research for her paper was carried out while consulting for the USAID Office of Women in Development's NGO Small Grants Program <http://www.usaid.gov/wid/activities/ngosg.htm>
