

Laura Chrabolowsky

Laura Chrabolowsky has a BA in Comparative Development Studies from Trent University, an M.A. in International Political Economy from the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, and is currently a Ph.D. candidate in Political Science from Carleton University in Ottawa. Her main research interests are women, new social movements and the trade unions in Argentina. She is writing her doctoral dissertation on the relationship between social movement unionism and women's political participation within the context of neoliberal globalization and financial crisis in Argentina.